

Have you been forced onto social media for work?

Question: "The company where I work wants everyone on the team to have individual LinkedIn accounts so we can be searched and found for the convenience of clients and vendors, and to help validate the company's image. To me, asking for an employee to set up a social media account seems to be crossing a privacy line. I suppose I could refuse, but I think I might be alone ... does anyone else see this as asking too much, or is this just the age we live in?" - Joyce, Print Assistant
